Grammar

1. Morphological Typology

1.1 Traditional Typology

Synthesis

Luxen is a generally polysynthetic language.

Fusion

Luxen is a mostly aggluntative language, with each morpheme typically having an isolated meaning.

1.2 Morphological Processes

Affixes

Luxen uses all types of affixes.

Prefix

Suffix

Circumfix

Circumfixes are rarely used in Luxen. Circumfixes are typically used when modification of an affix is awkward or unavailable.

Lh in n:lüşfa.

I am eating harvested energy.

Infix

Reduplication

Reduplication is when part or all of a word is repeated to emphasize or change the meaning of a word. Reduplication is most commonly used in the names of common animals.

Stem Modification

Luxen rarely uses stem modification. It is most commonly seen in the words "in" and "un" which both mean "to be". "un" can be translated as the habitual form of "in".

Suprasegmental Modification

Suprasegmental modification is how the stress or tone of a word changes depending on how it is used in a sentence. Unreleased and glottal stops are frequently used to separate concepts.

Yanagauhvu ip íc tɬ:cuagen.

They are washing the item.

Yanagauhvu ip' íc tɬ:cuagen.

They have liquid for the item.

2.1. Nouns

2.1.1. Types of Nouns

2.1.1.1. Proper Names

2.1.1.2. Possessability

2.1.1.3. Count vs Mass

2.1.2. Pronouns and Anaphoric Clitics

yanagauh and yanagpwa may translate to subject and object, but they are more used in the way that a sign language speaker would use each hand to talk about a different subject

2.2. Verbs

2.2.1. Semantic Roles

Adjective order goes

[size] [condition] [color] [pattern] [shape] [age] [noun] [(material)auh] [zh (origin)]
[opinion]

big perfect blue checkered bottle old milk from almonds of Europe garbage

But, any adjective which would typically come after the noun can be appended with eh "type" to bring it to the front.

4.4. Case Marking

4.5. Articles and Demonstratives

Rather than coming before a word, articles are embedded into the word as suffixes.

"-en" directly translates to "undefined"

"-ag-" is a very powerful infix and can make a suffix more general or specific depending on how it is used.

"-agen" loosely translates to "the" or "you know what I am talking about" in the sense that "vu" can translate "you know which ones I am talking about" or "this affects everyone who perceives this"

"He has the seed"

"Yanagauh ip eg*agen"
